

Are you avoiding that awkward moment?

March 18th was National Awkward Moments Day – a day when we can remember and share some of those moments in our lives that we’ve found awkward or embarrassing. From tripping up to forgetting people’s names, there’s lots of things we accidentally do that can make us cringe. National Awkward Moments Day aims to make us realize awkward moments are normal, and it’s okay to see the funny side.

But some “awkward” moments are not always quite so light-hearted.

Thinking about what happens after you die is for many a very awkward moment. However, this is the moment when you can take control and make a will to ensure your loved ones are protected after you’ve gone.

What is a will?

A will, more formally known as a “last will and testament,” is a legal document that explains what should happen to your things after you die. Requirements are different in each state, but wills typically include:

- ◆ What to do with possessions
- ◆ What to do with real estate
- ◆ What to do with money
- ◆ Who should be the guardian for any children
- ◆ Who is in charge of making sure the instructions in the will are followed

A will makes sure that people know your wishes after you’re gone. It also makes a big difference to your loved ones. They’ll already have a lot on their minds as they grieve, and a will can save them the unnecessary upset and hardship of trying to figure out what you would have wanted.

So, awkwardness aside, making a will is the best way to make sure your family is protected and that you get peace of mind.
